Leadership through different lenses: A Public Leadership Masterclass Series

Enhance your leadership style with new perspectives and practical tools

Effective leadership is strengthened by an ability to see things from multiple perspectives. This series recognises this, and that public leaders need to think creatively to solve complex problems and deliver value to the communities they serve.

The format of the PLM series has changed this year to better facilitate peer-to-peer learning and cross-jurisdictional connection. Each masterclass series features five masterclasses that speak to an overarching theme and are structured to allow for ample reflection and discussion with your counterparts from across Australia and Aotearoa New Zealand.

Inspire you to reimagine your role

A public leadership masterclass series will inspire you to reimagine your role in the public and for purpose sectors and become the leader you want to be – talented, creative, innovative – for the challenges of today with the ability to think strategically about the problems of tomorrow.

Learn from leaders in the field

The PLM series is facilitated by experts Robin Ryde and Professor Karin Lasthuizen.

Grow your skills to help lead others

In a global environment of increasing economic and political uncertainty, it is even more important for emerging public leader to have the knowledge, creativity and confidence required to provide informed and timely advice, and lead others through change

Future emerging leaders

The purpose of this series is to introduce emerging leaders to contemporary leadership perspectives and challenge them to be deliberate about the leader they want to become in future.
